What Is My Aim?

My Aim:

My aim in this project is combining two major issues that we are dealing with in these days. The first issue is our environment. People are still not aware of the harming and cruel returns of the increasing amounts of pollution in Jordan. Jordan is suffering from excessive amounts of garbage and lack of awareness. People are aware of the negative results caused by their laziness or selfishness towards our environment. Jordan is dealing with almost every type of pollution starting with water and air pollution. People should take actions according to the fact that our world is in danger and we should stop being selfish and start working on helping save our environment.

The second issue is our community. We usually visualize our community as the stereotypical image of a community with healthy and rich people not having in mind those who are really talented but are in special needs. Almost everything including commercials which are supposed to be passing on the right inspiring images are reinforcing the idea that people with special needs are untalented or not part of the main community. We are overestimating their abilities of being something really important in this world and valuing their hidden talents.

To achieve the perfect combination of these two major issues i had to combine my hobbies with my passions too. As an active and passionate volunteer who is interested in art I decided to work on something I'm good at. I thought that why wouldn't I make out of my artistic talents and my presence as a volunteer in the Arab Group for the Protection of Nature something helpful for my community and my spirit. So I got the idea of the Four R's project which is basically about recycling, reusing, reducing garbage in something good and most importantly reviving our souls .

Disability Discrimination

The background of the slide features faint, grey silhouettes of four individuals representing different types of disabilities: a person on the left using sign language, a person in the center using a wheelchair, a person on the right using a white cane, and a person on the far right walking a dog.

It's a form of discrimination against people with disabilities. It assumes that people who have disabilities must either strive to become that norm or should keep their distance from able-bodied people.

Souq Jara

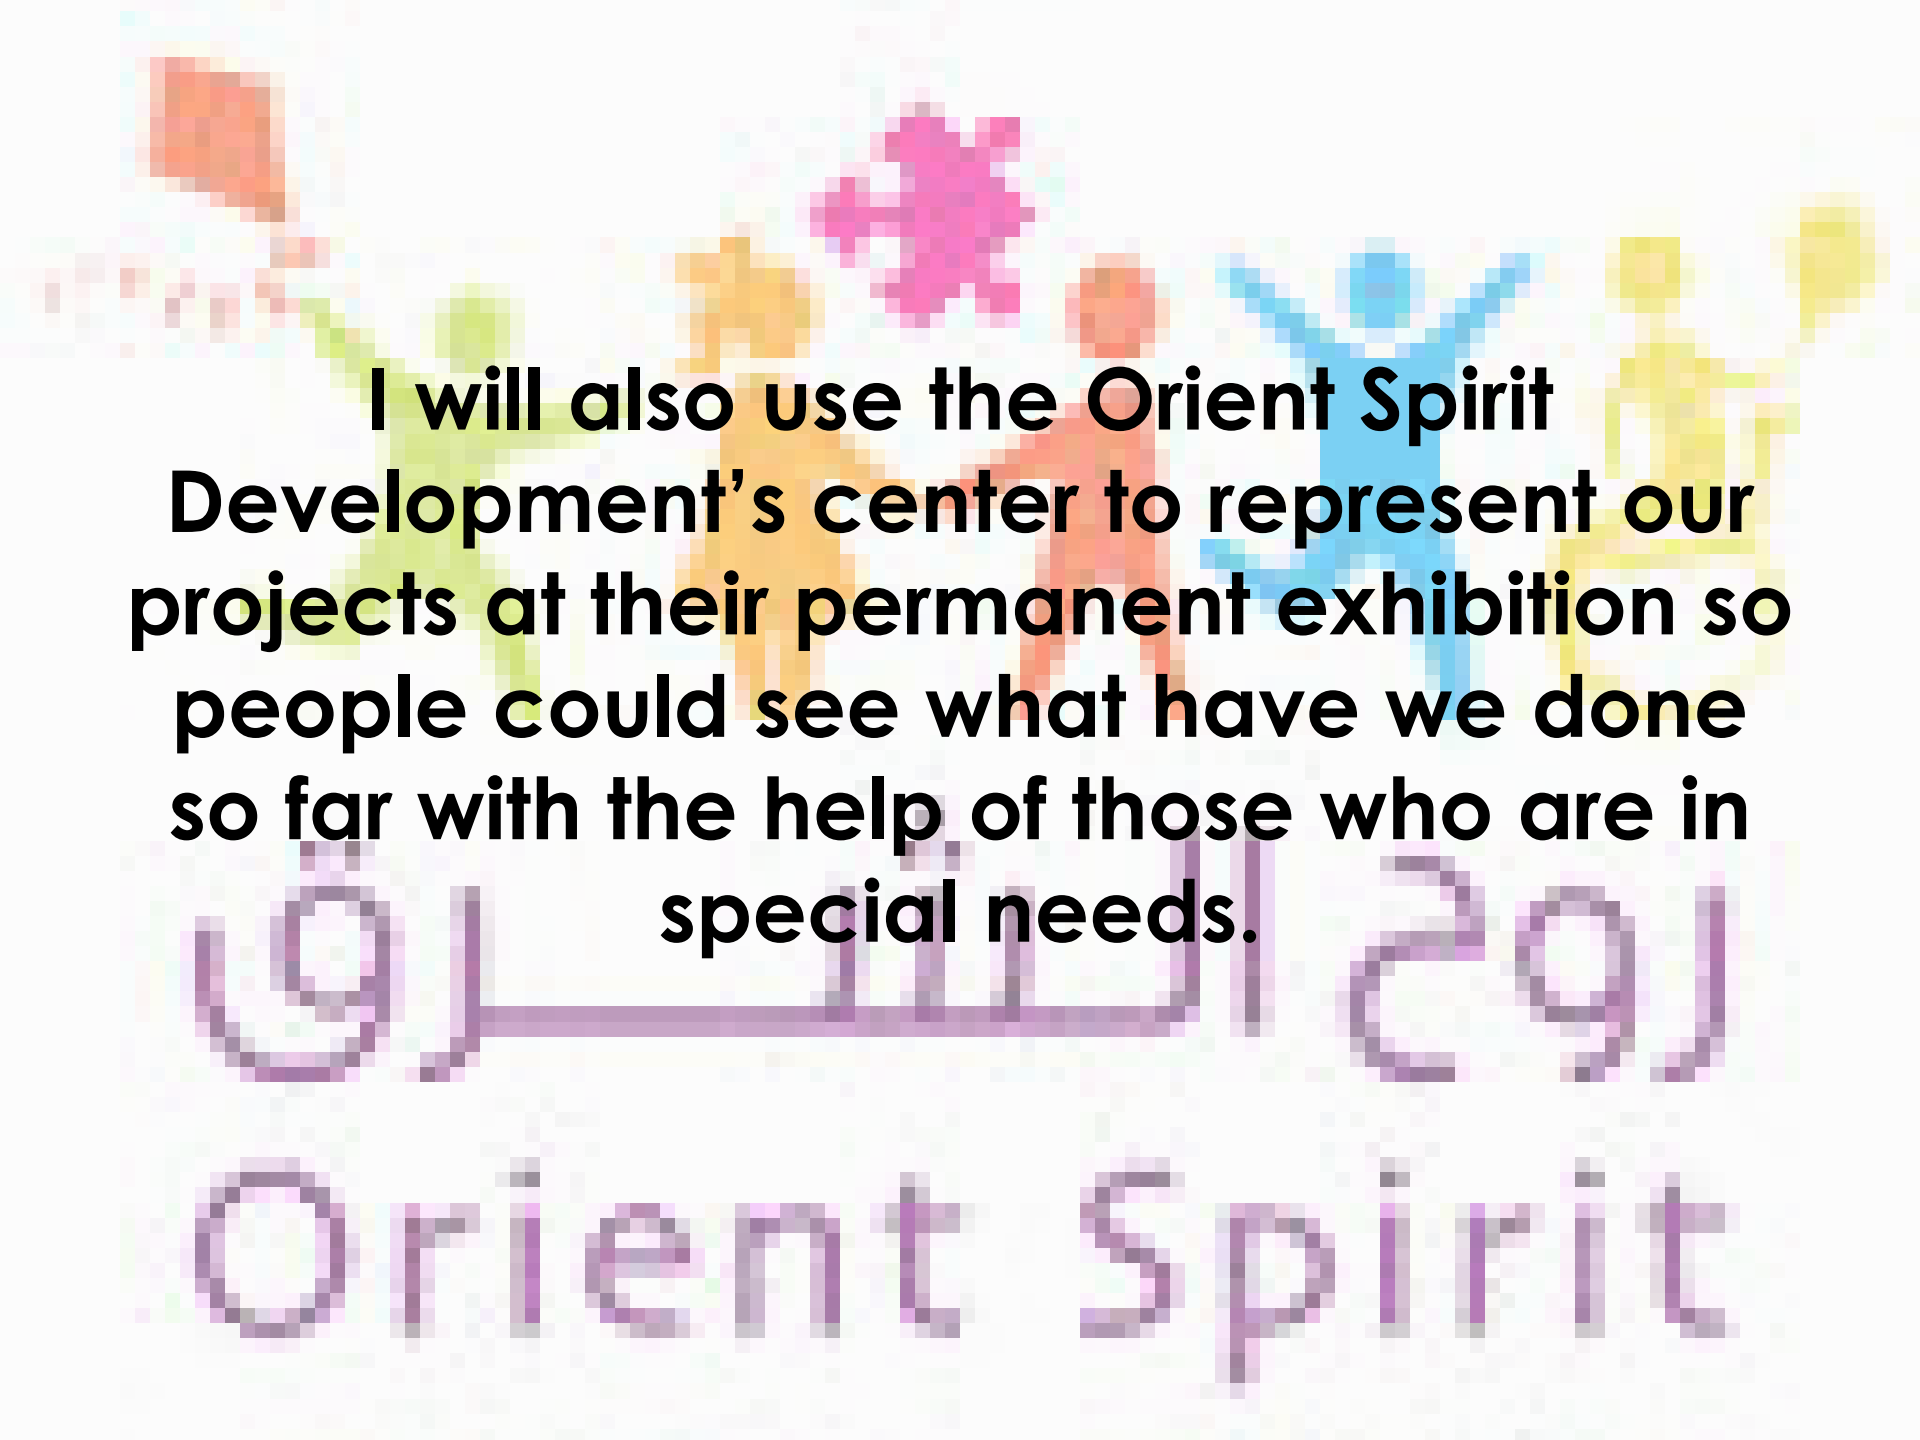

With the help of an organization I volunteer in which is The Arab Group for the Protection of Nature we rented a table in Souq Jara so we could represent our recycled items and to aware people about the issues I'm discussing.

Orient Spirit

I will also use the Orient Spirit Development's center to represent our projects at their permanent exhibition so people could see what have we done so far with the help of those who are in special needs.

Why is my project unique?

What makes my project unique is that I looked at the different zones in the community. I also started with working on myself, moving upwards to my family and close ones ending with the whole community including those who are in special needs. I tried to dig deep in the issues that are not common known in our society or neglected. I tried to do a project based on stuff that I am good at.
